       I personally think that my website looks standard. However, it doesn't mean that it is flawless. One stylistic choice I would make if I had more time would be a solid bar across the page below each category so they don't blend into the text. I would also try different combinations of indentations and choose the one that looks the most legible. A sidebar for navigating through would also be ideal in this case for convenience. I probably could have also bolded each category to be more distinguishable from the sub-categories. Icons can probably also be added in more places other than the sidebar for the data page, but I only put them there because it looks the most intuitive to me.

       Overall, these were the only critiques that I could come up with about my website for now.
